Job Title: Sales Support Assistant	Location: Hunmanby, U.K.
Department: Commercial	Contract: Full time
Reports To: Sales Office Supervisor	Direct Reports: None

1.0 Job Summary & Role

The Sales Support Assistant, has the responsibility of providing support for the customer enquiry and order processing stages on an end to end basis to meet the timely demands of customers on a global basis within the published key performance indicators.

The Sales support assistant has the responsibility of supporting the Business Development Managers with production of quotations and handling of all service-related issues that occur in connection with customers' orders. This involves dealing with all types of customer/Prospect requests, processing orders, processing and despatching goods, and information such as stock availability, delivery dates and pricing.

The Internal Sales is the initial point of call for all customer service-related issues and needs to be familiar to with the typical demands placed upon DSE from customers, in terms of procurement processes/ systems employed.

The Sales support assistant is also expected to identify possible opportunities for the business through their conversations that can be communicated to the BDM team for their follow up and action.

Sales support provides office support to either an individual or team and is vital for the smooth-running of a business. Their duties may include fielding telephone calls, receiving and directing visitors, creating reports and presentations, and filing critical documentation in an efficient manner that meets audit requirements.

The Sales support assistant acts as the connecting piece between the customer and the Business Development Managers by doing things like processing orders, keeping track of customer information and providing post-sale customer service reports. It's a fast-paced environment that requires a high degree of company and systems/process knowledge and a strong ability to multitask.
